The topic of the 14th International Summers School of Museology focuses on the theme of the International Museum day 2022, as defined by ICOM - "The Power of Museums".

» Museums have the power to transform the world around us. As incomparable places of discovery, they teach us about our past and open our minds to new ideas – two essential steps in building a better future.

...we want to explore the potential of museums to bring about positive change in their communities through three lenses:

The power of achieving sustainability: Museums are strategic partners in implementing the Sustainable Development Goals of the United Nations. As key actors in their local communities, they contribute to a wide variety of Goals, which include fostering short-circuit and social economy and disseminating scientific information on environmental challenges.

The power of innovating on digitalisation and accessibility: Museums have become innovative playing grounds where new technologies can be developed and applied to everyday life. Digital innovation can make museums more accessible and engaging, helping audiences understand complex and nuanced concepts.

The power of community building through education: Through its collections and programmes, museums thread a social fabric that is essential in community building. By upholding democratic values and providing life-long learning opportunities to all, they contribute to shaping an informed and engaged civil society. «

PROGRAMME AND GOALS

The summer school programme is designed in collaboration with institutions covering different aspects in the field of museology and heritage. It is based on exchanging good practices with European specialists with broad and diverse experience and expertise. These will be offered as lectures, workshops, and debates.

The summer school's primary goal is to provide and establish communication and an open debate between museum specialists, educators and students. Participants will have a chance to learn about past and ongoing museum projects and good practices and rethink museums' purpose, current role, and relationship with society. Lecturers will share their experience, knowledge, views, strategies and thoughts about museums, museology and heritage, thus enabling the participants to gain a broader, international and contemporary perspective on the topic.

PARTICIPANTS

Based on the transfer of knowledge and exchange of ideas through communication, the 14th International School of Museology is designed for different participants, such as museum curators, students, educators in the field of museology and heritage and all others interested in museums as active and dynamic stakeholders in contemporary international society.

THE STUDENTS ACQUIRE 3 ECTS FOR THE PARTICIPATION.
